Legendary Dance Theater Taps New Leader

They have performed in 48 states and 71 countries, for more than 20 million people. The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater started as a small group of black dancers and today is an internationally renowned powerhouse of talent. In July, a new artistic director will lead the New York-based company, succeeding dance legend Judith Jamison. As part of a special Tell Me More broadcast from the Big Apple, host Michel Martin speaks with choreographer and artist-in-residence, Robert Battle, about his new role and vision for the company.
