

Alvin Ailey hits bullseye with Target 20 Night

Posted in Dance, What's going on by James Lobo on September 25th, 2009 at 4:18 pm

A performance by the world-renowned hoofers of Alvin Ailey dance troupe is must-see theater for a city kid. And thanks to the culture-savvy folks at Target, your family can cross the experience off your to-do list for less money than you'd expect.

December 3 is Target 20 Night, a celebration of 20 years of artistic direction by choreographing diva and Emmy award winner Judith Jamison. For one evening only, all seats in the house will be $20 each (normally $25–$135). The program will include a short film tribute to Jamison, an excerpt from Divining (her first piece for Ailey), and the full-length Revelations, her signature spectacular.

One catch: You can only get the tickets on Saturday October 3 in person at the box office (131 W 55th St between Sixth and Seventh Aves) beginning at 9am. But don't worry: Your kids won't mind standing on line with you. A number of free activities—including a visit from the Treats Truck, chair massages, music and other surprises—should keep everyone in a good mood. So turn off So You Think You Can Dance and quick-step on over there.